In 2017, Mark Sullivan delivered one of the most talked about—and adored—books in recent memory with Beneath a Scarlet Sky, firmly placing him on the path to becoming one of the biggest names in historical fiction. The #1 bestselling phenomenon received tens of thousands of reader reviews, nearly a quarter of a million positive ratings on Goodreads, a Goodreads Choice Award nomination, and a major television deal with Pascal Pictures with Tom Holland attached to star.

Following the breakout success of Beneath a Scarlet Sky, Sullivan was told he'd never find an untold World War II story as compelling as Pino Lella's, the hero and real-life inspiration for the novel. While he felt confident he would, he certainly did not expect to uncover the basis for his next novel in the same town where he'd first heard Pino's story just over a decade before. But, that is exactly what happened.

On May 4, 2021, Mark Sullivan will share what he discovered in THE LAST GREEN VALLEY (Lake Union Publishing; hardcover), a historical novel based on the untold true story of the Martels, a Ukrainian family who fled Europe during Stalin and Hitler's terrorizing reigns and began a long, arduous migration west to freedom in Montana. This extraordinary exodus saga is as powerful and memorable as his runaway bestselling historical novel debut.

THE LAST GREEN VALLEY opens as the Martel family, caught in a dangerous no-man's land between advancing and retreating armies, embark on "The Long Trek," a series of marches in the final days of World War II. The Martels are one of the many families of German heritage whose ancestors farmed in Ukraine for more than a century. After already living under Stalin's horrifying regime, young Emil and Adeline Martel must make an impossible decision: Do they wait for the Soviet's intrusion and risk being sent to Siberia? Or do they reluctantly follow the murderous Nazi officers who have pledged to protect "pure blood" Germans? Ultimately, they decide they must retreat from their land and go in search of freedom. Together with their two young sons, they pack what's left of their possessions into a small wagon and make the dangerous trek, clinging in their most desperate moments to their dream: a new life in a beautiful green valley surrounded by mountains and forests.

To research the book, Sullivan trailed the Martels' route through present-day Moldova, Romania, Hungary, the Czech Republic, and Poland. He, along with Bill and Walter Martel, who are now both in their eighties, traveled to Ukraine where they visited the ruins of the childhood home they fled with their parents. He interviewed historians as well as other participants and eyewitnesses to "The Long Trek." He listened to recordings of people describing the ordeal and writes in the book's preface that he "felt in awe of the grit, humanity, and spirit the showed in the face of seemingly unsurmountable challenges and odds."

With THE LAST GREEN VALLEY, Mark Sullivan "again demonstrates his gift for finding little-known embers of history and breathing life into them until they glow and shine in ways that are both moving and memorable" (Pam Jenoff, New York Times bestselling author).
